Course description

"I don't work with preschoolers" is a comment heard many times when we talk about stuttering therapy for the young child. Truth is, however, that no matter what population we work with now, it may not be the population we work with in the future. No matter what, sometime, somewhere a client, relative or friend is going to expect us to be a resource for a young child who is beginning to show signs of stuttering. Join us for this interactive workshop which includes video clips and participant role-plays of concepts presented.

Learner Outcomes

As a result of this presentation, workshop participants will demonstrate increased:

- Interpret current literature regarding risk factors for stuttering in preschool children
- Outline resources used to educate parents regarding stuttering in the preschool child.
- Integrate parent training of environmental modifications and fluency enhancing techniques in the treatment of preschool children who stutter
- Describe transitional strategies involved in therapy of a preschool child.
